Recruitment Company PPG, based in Dublin 2, are set to launch a new Customised Interview Preparation Service to suit the needs of jobseekers in their specific industries. With so many high calibre candidates flooding the market, PPG aim to better equip jobseekers giving them a greater level of confidence and the techniques to compete in 2009. This initiative aims to take jobseekers through the entire jobseeking process from identifying the companies who are currently recruiting in their industry to writing a winning CV and from the interviewing process to preparing for their new job.

A recent article on eirjobs.com laments the decrease in quality of CVs that are uploaded to their website.

“Working with recruiters, employers and applicants, we see many CVs every week. It’s sad to say that a high percentage of these CVs tend to have the same problems.”

PPG have over 35 years experience in recruitment for specialist sectors and so have insider knowledge into exactly what clients are looking for in potential employees, which will give their candidates an insightful edge over the competition.

PPG are looking to up the ante for their candidates by not only helping them to write compelling CVs, but will take them through effective Job Search and Interview Techniques from successful networking skills to building a personal database of potential interview questions and answers.

Robert Cogill, Division Manager for PPG says:

“In today’s market, jobseekers find it increasingly difficult to keep ahead of the pack while still remaining positive. PPG have devised a workshop that will both enable jobseekers to gain invaluable market knowledge and improve their interviewing skills thus helping them to secure their ideal job.”

PPG will launch the Scheme on the 8th May in their Dublin 2 office and will be running small ½ day workshops twice weekly.
